Patroliman Tate heard the child's cries and ran to her assistance. He threw off his coat, and, wrapping it around the little one, ran with her in his arms to the nearest signal box, where he telephoned for ar ambulance.

Tate was bunned about the hands and his coat was ruined. The child was badly burned about the legs and body, but she will recover. She was removed to St. Peter's Hospital.

Persons who saw the incident say that had not Tate acted so quickly the child would undoubtedly have been burned to death. It will cost Tate $16 for a new coat.

second season next Saturday evening Many novel features have been introduced in this piece. For two months a corps of scenic artists have been at work making preparations for the production of "Fantasma."

During the Summer, Manager Kennedy has been making new arrangements in the theatre for the comfort of his patrons. The incline of the floor has been changed so that every seat commands a view of the stage. He has also prepared numerous attractions for the coming season, the most conspicuous of which will possibly be Steve Brodle, who will make his debut in "On the Bowery," which will follow "Fantasma."

GRAND OPERA-HOUSE.

The Grand Opera-House has been thoroughly renovated, and the interior decoration will probably be a surprise to its patrons this season. There are new seats, superb decorations in old ivory and shell colors. A new system of electric lighting has been introduced on the stage. Manager McCutcheon has arranged for a fine list of attractions for the season.
